It also shows off the Vancouver company's 35,000-square-foot facility in Coalinga, California and even features aesthetic shots of its mascot Loki the Wolfdog.

"We are excited for the months to come as we ramp up production and continue to roll-out quality products with SDC and our brand partners, which have significant influence and subculture, giving NGW the largest voice in California," CEO Leigh Hughes said in a statement.

NGW applies for cannabis cultivation licenses

The company also announced it has applied for five annual cannabis cultivation licenses in California. After receiving temporary licenses in 2018, the company's renewal efforts are headed to the California Department of Food and Agriculture for approval.

The Vancouver-based company still has its local license in place, and its distribution license has been extended through July 25.
