'The best days for gold are yet to come' as coronavirus sharpens focus on yellow metal

"The coronavirus is something that's in everyone's life - debt's been going up, Brexit and trade wars but these haven't really affected people on a day-to-day basis whereas coronavirus is", says Simon Popple from the Brookville Capital Intelligence Report.

"It's bringing more attention to the gold market than it's previously had".

"Investors are looking at ways to protect themselves in uncertain times and gold is obviously one avenue that they're looking at".
